90 minutes

Richard McPherson - How to use your drone to conduct surveys, site analysis, planning, and design, create 3D models and inspections, identify potential hazards/risks, asset inventory, project reporting, and collaboration, and resolve disputes. Unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs) can survey an area faster and more efficiently than other options. As this improves, the expanding uses of drones at construction sites will improve safety, increase productivity, and enhance security. So, are you ready to dream bigger and fly higher?

Esports in the Computer Science Classroom: While the public face of esports is the player, there are myriad roles behind the scenes in this growing industry! Computer science careers are no exception. The development of the games themselves is an obvious topic for the classroom, but there are plenty of other options, as well. In this session, we'll cover engaging real-world examples to take back to your students.

Arts, A/V & Communication Room: ICW 240

- Taking Pictures in the Classroom: Donna Groves, graphics teacher at Waynesville and professional photographer, will be presenting a session on photography. Her session will be focused on how to best take pictures in your classroom. In other words, not just studio shots, but everyday pictures such as taking a pic of Student of the Month and SkillsUSA Medalist, even groups of medalists. She will share tips on how to light them and where to take their picture when inside the school building (i.e. fighting fluorescent lights).
